Securing your dreams starts with a financial plan

To see your dreams become a reality, it is important to begin with a sound, yet flexible financial plan. The plan must be specific to you, your goals, and begin with where you are today and put you on a path toward where you want to be tomorrow.

In order to incorporate the best solutions into your plan, your Financial Advisor needs to have a thorough understanding of your current financial picture as well as your short- and long-term goals.

By working together to assess your needs and identify the appropriate solutions for your individual situation — whether your focus is preparing for retirement, protection planning for your family or business, funding your child's education, taking care of aging parents or a special needs child, transitioning a business, or creating a legacy for your heirs or charity — you will be taking the first step toward securing your goals.

Of course, no plan can remain stagnant. Life will evolve or unexpected circumstances will arise that require adjustments to your plan. When this occurs, your Advisor — armed with your full financial status — will be well-positioned to help you thoughtfully navigate those changes.

The historic economic difference between those that planned and those that didn't

People who had a financial plan enjoyed a clear 'planning premium' with hard financial benefits.

Not only did they hold a much broader range of retirement and non-retirement assets than those who did not have a plan, they also amassed a significantly higher value of assets: on average, 'planners' have amassed nearly two-and-a-half times (245%) more in their retirement plans compared to 'non-planners,' and over three times more (319%) in non-retirement assets."¹

In addition, planners who sought professional advice gained an 'advice advantage.' "On average, those who take advice and have financial plans have amassed over three-and-a-half times (375%) the retirement assets and over five times (518%) the non-retirement assets of those who do neither. Combining planning and advice yields the best results."²

The Financial Planning Process

To get you started on achieving your dreams, your Advisor will approach the planning process in three parts—Discuss, Design, and Deliver. Each component ensures that your Advisor thoroughly understands your goals, has the data necessary to begin an analysis of your financial picture, and develop a proposed strategy.

Discuss

Building a financial plan designed to help you meet your financial ambitions begins with a discussion. Depending on your individual situation, your discussion may be focused on some or all of the following:

Net Worth Analysis

Cash Flow Analysis

Education Planning

Investment Planning

Retirement Planning

Protection Planning

Estate Planning

Business Planning¹

Executive Benefits Planning

Charitable Planning²

Design

Once your Advisor has gathered all the necessary data and has a full understanding of your goals, this information will be carefully analyzed to develop a strategy designed specifically to meet your financial objectives.

Deliver

Your Advisor will meet with you to deliver a proposed financial plan. Once all the details in your plan are agreed to, it is important to implement the plan.

Should you choose to work with your Advisor to implement your plan, you will benefit from having a financial expert who is well-versed with your financial picture, preferences, and concerns to help you navigate changes in the market, changes in your goals, or other unexpected circumstances.
